Wood vs. metal: what happens in a fire

Lundia natural timber shelving

24 seconds flame exposure. No effect on the paper. Even after two minutes, although the underneath of the shelf is beginning to discolour, the paper is undamaged and the top surface of the shelf remains cool enough to touch.

typical metal shelving

15 seconds exposure. The paper begins to smoulder. After only 24 seconds the paper is discolouring. By the one minute mark it is seriously charred.

In a fire your worst enemy may be heat rather than flames.

As our demonstration shows, metal shelving will conduct heat very rapidly to whatever is stored upon it. Even a modest fire could cause catastrophic damage to irreplaceable files, computer tapes or disks. Lundia's natural timber shelving on the other hand is a poor conductor, not only of heat but also of electricity and magnetism. Wood tends to dampen rather than transmit noise and vibration. Wood is dependable, rustproof and chemically non-reactive.

And with Lundia shelving you have one of the most attractive looking storage systems around.

Don't gamble with your company's vital records and files — put your money on Lundia.

Wood storage shelving does not conduct heat, electricity or magnetism.

When considering storage systems for your business, look carefully at some of the major advantages that a Lundia solid timber shelving system enjoys over its metal competition.

Wood storage shelving will not conduct heat, electricity or magnetic fields—all potentially hazardous to your files and records.

A wood system will absorb moisture, vibration and noise, contributing to a significantly quieter, more pleasant working environment.

When you take into account Lundia shelving's natural good looks, strength and amazing versatility, are you really left with any choice at all?

Why trust your vital files to anything else?
